

iinsight® and iignite® gain IRAP accreditation

Government service providers welcome new information security standards

Government service providers can enhance information security and remain compliant with regulations, thanks to industry-leading platforms iinsight® and iiignite® meeting stringent new data protection standards.

Cloud-based employment services and case management platforms iinsight® and iiignite® have recently gained IRAP accreditation, meeting new Department of Employment requirements for data encryption and protection. Both platforms are products of Be Software, one of only two ICT providers to successfully meet the criteria.

“Information security is our top priority,” says Renato Parletta, CEO of Be Software. “We hold disability, health and employment records for hundreds of thousands of Australians and well over a million people worldwide. IRAP accreditation confirms that we’re doing the very best we can to protect people’s personal information.”

IRAP is a standard created by the Australian Securities Directorate (ASD), the government intelligence agency responsible for data security and protection in Australia. Employment services providers to the Department of Employment must use third-party IT providers that are IRAP accredited.

IRAP accreditation builds on Be Software’s already high data security processes, with the company having held ISO 27001 accreditation since early 2015. The accreditation process involved complying with more than 780 individual controls in a process that took six months to complete.

“We’re committed to identifying areas for improvement, so we found the process quite exciting,” says Parletta. “By meeting and exceeding these standards, we protect highly sensitive encrypted information. It’s more than a compulsory standard for us – it’s about delivering best-practice solutions, preventing data breaches, and ensuring and peace of mind for our clients.”
